

WVU Libraries began an evaluation of purchases and subscriptions to scholarly and classroom information resources in late spring 2023 with an aim to reduce the Fiscal Year 2024 budget. This evaluation was separate from the University's current Academic Support Unit Review which was part of the larger Academic Transformation process.

Library administrators, with the assistance of collection development experts, considered content that overlaps with existing resources or is readily available through Interlibrary Loan.

Other criteria evaluated in making these decisions include usage data, cost per use and centrality of the content to the discipline. The collective impact of the reductions across disciplines is also considered.

Faculty and researchers are encouraged to leverage Interlibrary Loan for items the University does not own and to seek the assistance of liaison librarians to identify existing library collections and low-cost alternatives.

As part of Libraries' FY2024 collections reduction project, librarians from across WVU analyzed journal packages and individual serial subscriptions from Taylor & Francis, SpringerNature, Elsevier Science Direct, Wiley, Cambridge, and EBSCO Information Services.

When reviewing specific titles, we considered several variables, including journal price, usage data, cost per use, overlap with other collections, and centrality of the content to WVU's curriculum, and in cases where these variables were inconclusive, journal impact factor. Much of this content remains available through alternative subscriptions, but is restricted by a temporary embargo, or delay in access to the most recent issues.

Articles not available through university subscriptions may be requested through our interlibrary loan service.
